Chapter 1 — The Whispering Path

Lily packed a pear, a pencil, and her bravest sweater. The forest at the end of her street had always been ordinary — until the ferns started whispering her name.

Pip the fox appeared first as a flash of rust between the trees. “You dropped this,” he said, and held out a small brass key shaped like a leaf.

Lily did not know what the key opened. She only knew she wanted to find out with a friend.

Chapter 2 — The River That Giggled

They followed a creek that laughed whenever stones skipped across it. On the far bank, a bridge of woven vines waited — but only if they asked politely.

“Please,” Lily said. The vines lowered. Pip bowed so low his whiskers touched the moss.

On the other side, the trees opened into a clearing full of lantern mushrooms. None of them were afraid of the dark.

Chapter 3 — The Dragon Who Was Shy

The dragon was the size of a cottage and the color of tea. He hid behind a waterfall because his roar came out as a hiccup.

Lily sat on a rock and told him about school, and sandwiches, and how being new can feel like a roar stuck in your throat.

When the dragon hiccuped again, the waterfall briefly turned into glitter. They all agreed that was an excellent kind of magic.

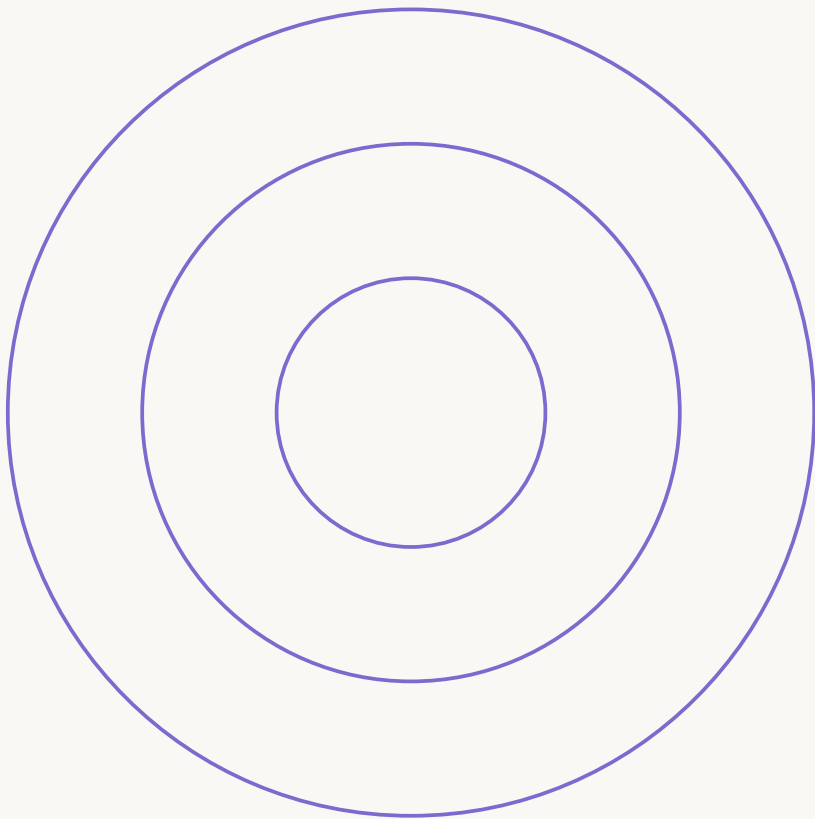

Chapter 4 — Home Before Supper

The leaf-key opened a gate of ivy that led straight back to Lily's street. Pip promised to visit whenever the ferns whispered.

Lily put the key on her bookshelf, between a pinecone and a library card. Some adventures fit in a pocket. The best ones also fit in a friendship.
